WASHINGTON - Republicans:

washing a sitto million campaign that will dwarf the spending of presidential candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore in an effort to get wavering or indifferent woters to actually go to the polls in November.

Under the Victory 2000 labet, a special division of the Republican National Committee and state Republican parties will target wavering citizens - over the air, on the phone, in the mail and on doorsteps - in hopes of boosting turnout among those who seem most likely to come down on the side of Bush and other COP candidates, up and down the ticket.

With early indications that this election will continue the trend of lower vater participation in which less than half of those eligible cast ballost in 1996, mobilization of relatively unmotivated potential supporters might be critical cast ballots in 1996, mobilization of relatively unmotivated potential supporters might be critical to the outcome.

In 1996 and 1998, Democrats and their union allies did a better job of turning out their most reliable voters than did Republicaus. But this year, with evidence that the "Republican base" is already more than 90 percent committed to Bush and eager to oust the Democrats from the White House, the GOP is investing an unprecedented treasury vin going after the undecided and the weak partisans.

"The Democrats will have to work hard to get out their 'base' for Gore, and I don't think they will be able to match us in the battleground precincts and states," said Fred Meyer, the for-

Gunman accused of killing deputy turns himself in PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) – A gunman suspected of killing a sheriff's deputy surrendered Sunday to police officers who were negotiating with the man and firing their gas into his house in attempt to end the day-old standoff.

Thomas Mortin Roberts, 53, was taken info custndy after walking out of the house and turning himself in without incident to officers, said sheriff's spokesman jum Borte.

"There was no one else inside the residence and no injuries involved," Borte said.

Wallace E. "Wally" Davis, 48, was shot in the head when he responded to a report of a disturbance at the suspect's house on Saturday. He died at a hospital about an hour later.
Roberts was jailed on suspicion of first-degree murder of a police of first-degree murder of a police.

Crew shortage forces second day of United flight cancellations

CHICAGO (AP) - United Airlinos canceled 80 flights at O'Hare International Airport.on. Stunday, a day after having to cancel more than 120 flights there because of a pilot shortage. The airline blamed the cancellations on pilots who have refused to worked overtime since their contract expired in April. United spokesman Chris Brathwaite said many of the airline's pilots had already worked all their allotted weekly hours trying to make up for flights can Activists claim the exercises endanger Vieques' 9,400 residents and have-stunted economic development. But the Navy called the rally 'Part of a multi-million-dollar smear campaign' directed by groups who want independence for Puerto Rico.

"Most of these people have a political affiliation, and their cause has nothing to do with Vieques," said Navy spokesman Jeff Gordon.

Some of the protesters marched to the rally from the fed eral prison in San Juan, where authorities are holding 19 activists - including two local law makers - on charges of trying to enter the bombing range to halt exercises. Attendance at the rally - orga-nized hastily after the Navy announced the new exercises last week - fell far short of the 80,000 who marched at a similar event in February.

GRAND COULEE DAM, Wash.

GRAND COULEE DAM, Waster (AP) – The monumental construction of Grand Coulee Dam has seen called the Eighth Wonder of the World.

Sixty years after this hydropower behemoth became the engine that drives a good chunk of the Northwest economy, an international commission is studying Grand Coulee to help better plan water-resource projects around the world.

"It's really the anchor of the entire Columbia River system," says Ed Mosey, a spokesman for the Bonneville Power Administration in Portland, Ore, which sells the electricity produced at the 7,000-megawant dam. "It's up there and out of sight or most Northwesterners, yet it's really what keeps their lights on and their heat on in the winter-time. It's one of the most important assets in the Northwest.

The World Commission on Dams in Cape Town, South Africa, is preparing a fine-town and their heat on in the winter-time than the country and the chird-largest on the planet, on one of the most impowerful river systems in the world more economic benefits to the Northwest than ever imagined by the federal agencies that conceived it, but at a cost especially to the American Indians who were displaced from their traditional riverside home.

Everything about this massive gravity dam is spectacular. Built on the Columbia River in northeastern Washington, the project has Been compared to the Great Pyramid in Egypt and the Great Wall of Chinà.

There is enough concrete in the dam to build a 4-inch thick, 60-foot wide highway from Los Angeles to New York City - more tham 3,000 miles.

Grand Coulee Dam is $50 feet high (for comparison, the observation deck at the Space Needle in Seattle is 518 feet high), $50 feet wide at the base and 30 feet wide at the base and 30 feet wide at the crest, which accommodates a two-lane road on which cars can be driven.

The dam built in a huge canyon called Grand Coulee was a job-creating, Depression-era project to irrigate the Columbia Plateau and provide inexpensive public hydropower for the region.

In the 1940s, Woody Guthrie, commissioned by the BPA, sang the greatest thing built by the hands of a man."

The money from electrical production at three powerhouses helps subsidize the cost of irrigating $50,000 acres of farmland. All of the electricity produced at Grand Coulee case study was to take a dam that has been in existence for 60 years and to see what has happened to the project over that period of cf time," says Jim Mumford, regional program manager for safety of dams at the U.S. Please See DAM, Page A7

The Columbia River flows through a narrow channel, tamed by the Grand Coulee Dam. Construction of the dam has been called the Eighth Wonder of the World.

Unanticipated, according to the study, were the recreational benefits that would come with the dam - principally, the wast Lake Roosevelt National Recreation Area, which includes the reservoir stretching nearly to the Canadian border.

Many of the dams built under the Reclamation Act of 1902 helped pull the country out of the Depression and yanked the arid West into the 26th century, says Robert B. Jansen, 75, of Bellingham, a rettred Grand Coulee employee for the Burcau of Reclamation, which operates the dam.

Some 2,000 members of the Colville tribe were displaced by the dan and 100 to 250 members of the Spokane tribe were forced out. The U.S. government after 1940 stopped seeking Indian consent to acquire tribal lands, and Indian landowners were notified by mail that they would lose their property and how much they were to be paid.

They received their money much later than the 8,000 or so white people who lost their homes to the dam, and the buildings on their land were valued art less. DOE asks to postpone Pit 9 excavation

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - The Department of Energy plans to spend twice as much money on legal battles over Ft 9 next year as it does on cleaning up the one acre plot of buried nuclear waste. The agency has budgeted $6 million to pay court costs arising from a dispute with the company hired to dig up and treat nuclear weapons waste. The Energy Department has only budgeted $2.5 million next year for cleanup. leanup. Officials also are questioning

Officials also are questioning whether it makes sense to dig up the waste at Pit 9, a project that has been plagued by missed deadlines, disagreements and congressional inquiries for the last four year. Energy Department officials say there is not enough money in the current budget to pay for the expensive exavation, which is supposed to help scientists determine the best way to clean up nuclear varies buried in the Idaho desert.

The department has asked tare and federal regulators to postpone a quasi-archeological dig at Pit 9 - one with radioactive and potentially deadly artifacts. That would delay a long-standing plan to help pinpoint what waste from a nuclear weapons factory was dumped at the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory more than 30 years ago. The plan also seeks to demonstrate whether it is possible to dig up waste without exposing workers and the environment to floating plutonium.

"It's a sad commentary that DOE's spending more money in finger-pointing than getting something done on the ground," said Kathleen Trever, director of the state of Idaho's INEL oversight program.

Department of Energy spokesman Brad Bugger said the agency has little choice on how much money it spends on the two complicated lawsuits Pit 9 has complicated lawsuits Pit 9 has spawned with the said. "Unless you settle out of court, you have to pay what it takes to defend yourself."

The Pit 9 project has been embroiled in controversy almost since its inception in 1994. It was intended to demonstrate how boxes, barrels and drums of nuclear waste dumped into pits decades ago could be dug up, and treated. So far, no waste has been unearthed. The original contractor was fired in 1998, and now both parties are suing each other over who is at fault.

The Department of Energy assumed responsibility for the cleanup project, but fell, 16 months behind schedule on the project's first phase.

Fungus is largest living organism ever found

CORVALLIS (AP) - Walking through the Malheur National Forest in eastern Oregon you would be hard pressed to notice it. But a fungus spreading through the roots of trees now covers 2,200 acres, making it the largest living organism ever found. Popularly known as the honey mushroom, the Amillaria ostopie carred from a single store to 100.

Popularly known as the honey mushroom, the Armillaria ostoyne started from a single spore too small to see without a microscope and has been weaving its black shoestring filaments through the forest for an estimated 2,400 years, killing trees as it grows. "When you're on the ground, you don't notice the pattern, you just see dead' trees in clusters,". Tina Dreisbach, a botanist and mycologist with the U.S. Forest Service's Pacific Northwest Research Station in Corvallis, Ore, said Friday.

The outline of the giant fungus, strikingly similar to a mushroom, stretches 3.5 miles across, and extends an average of three feet into the ground. It covers an area to big as 1,655 football fields. No ne has estimated its weight.

"There hasn't been anything measured with any scientific technique that has shown any plant or animal to be larger than his," said foregory Filip, associate professor of integrated fofesty protection at Oregon State University and an expert in Armillaria.

Until now, the largest known organism was another Armillaria ostoyae found in 1992 in Washington State. It covered 1,500 acres near Mount Adams.

"We just decided to go out looking for one bigger than the last claim," Filip said.

Forest Service scientists are interested in learning to control Armillaria because it kills trees, Filip sald, but they also realize the fungus has served a purpose the fungus has served a purpose in nature for millions of years. The discovery came after Catherine Parks, a scientist at the Pacific Northwest Research Station in La Grande, Ore, in 1998 heard about a big tree die-off from root rot in the forest act of Prairie City, Ore.

Using aerial photos, Parks staked out an area of dying trees and collected root samples from 112.

She identified the fungus through DNA testing. Then, by comparing cultures of the fungus grown from the 112 samples, she determined that 61 were from the same organism, meaning a single fungus-had-grown bigger than anything anyone had ever described before.

On the surface, the only evidence of the fungus are clumps of golden mustrooms that pop up in the fall with the rain.

"They are edible, but they don't taste the best," said Dreisbach. "I would put lots of butter and garlic on them."
Digging into the roots of an affected tree, something that looks like white latex paint can be seen. These are mats of mycelium, which draw water and carbohydrates from the tree to feed the fungus and interfere with the tree's absorption of water and nurrients.

nutrients.

The black shoestring filaments called rhizomorphs stretch as much as 10 feet into the soil, invading tree roots through a combination of pressure and combination or pressure and enzyme action.

The huge size of the fungus may be related to the dry climate in eastern Oregon, Dreisbach said Friday. Spores have a hard time establishing new organisms, mak-ing room for the old-timers to spread.

Seen in the fall, Armillaria mushrooms are the only part of the Armillaria fungus that can be seen above ground. Amiliaria ostoyae, honey mushroom, started from a single spore and has be forests for an estimated 2,400 years.

M-C educators make some career changes

METABURN - Two Mini-Cassia educators are making big career changes in time for the next school year.

While Greg Lowe takes the reins as principal at White Pine Elementary School in Burley, Minidoka County school nurse Nency Kunau will seize the position he is vacating - priheipal of Heyburn Elementary School.

Lowe said he "loved every year" in Heyburn, loved the staff and made great strides, but he now has the chance to face new challenges and reach new goals.

"I just felt like it was a new opportunity for me to grow professionally," Lowe said. Originally from Salf Lake City, Lowe has been the principal for Heyburn's kindergartners through sixth graders for seven years. Before that, he taught sixth grade for 14 years and third grade for a year with the Grace School District. He also coached high school basketball team.

White Pine outsizes Heyburn Elementary. While Heyburn has about $70 students, White Pine has more than 700 fourth-through sixth-graders.

Kunau, born and raised in Burley and known as Minidoka County's school nurse for the past 13 years, has aspired to the position for a while. She obtained her prin-cipalship degree from University of Idaho in 1998.

She was one of 14 people who applied to be principal at White Pine. Although she lost to Lowe, she was one of four who interviewed and the only applicant without any experience as principal.

Kunau did beat out nine candidates for the position in Heyburn. The Minidoka County School Board made the final decision hast week.

Although she said she'll miss the care-pal.

"If you have the privilege to work with children, you have one of the best jobs in the world." Kunau said.
She also anticipates working with a strong staff, at a school where the foundation already is set for a strong education, she said.

Drunk drivers must be run off of society's roads

There is no excuse for Just last month, a young woman died on Interstate 86 west of Pocatello – the car ahe was riding in was pilloted by a drunk driver. Too often, we're reminded of the dangers of slipping behind the wheel after a few drinks too many. Often, the driver is fortunate, arriving at a destination unscathed and without inflicting any damage on the rest of us.

Sadly, that's nor always the cuse. It's a known fact that alcohol degrades the senses, reduces motor skills and truly does impair a driver's ability to safely operate a car or other machings.

habitual drunken driving, and there is ery.
But on a regular basis, people continue to die because someone's senses were clouded by liquor. Every day in the United States, people get behind the wheel drunk and and un taking a life no excuse for us to tolerate laws that allow drunk drivers to continue getting behind behind the wheel drunk and end up taking a life or losing their own. People of most every age drink and drive and kill. There's no excuse for the wheel until they kill someone.

it.

Our system of justice needs to be less tolerant of drunken driving. As it is now, more and more repeat offenders are finding their way back to jail and court, clogging the dockets. And people are still dying. Presently, Idaho's code allows drivers two convictions for driving drunk within a five-year span before the crime becomes a felony. The first offense carries with it a maximum fine of $1,000, and a maximum jail sentence of six months. Violators lose their licenses for a month.

Penalties for the second offense essentially double. A violator could pay $2,000 and spend a year behind bars. Driving privileges could be suspended for a year.

stally double. A violator could psy $2,000 and spend a year behind bars. Driving privileges could be suspended for a year.

Not until the third offense does driving drunk in Idaho become a felony. At this stage, a violator could spend five years in prison, pay up to $5,000 in fines and lose his or her license for at least a year after being released from prison.

Is the law tough enough?

We don't think so. Not for an act so inexcusable.

Lt. Jay Lusk, a 27-year police veteran, has seen police veteran, has seen clients and there is see for us that the seen is share of drunk driving accidents, and it wouldn't bother him to see Idaho's code toughened up a bit. Lusk, who also says drunk driving is an inexcusable at the seen could be harsher.

"There's just no reason for it," he said. "There such a between the same of the seen could be harsher.

"There's just no reason for it," he said. "There sto excuse." While Idaho's code is comparable with drunken driving codes in other states, it doesn't go far enough. Some states, according to Lusk, go so far as to conflicate vehicles and permanently revoke driving privileges, in addition to sentencing felony drunken drivers to lengthy prison terms.

Idaho should consider beefing up its drunk driving laws. There is no excuse for us to tolerate laws that allow drunk drivers to continue getting behind the wheel until they kill someone.

For most of four days George W. Bush or chestrated a political convention designed to tell the nation what the Republican Party would no longer be. It would no longer be a party that ignores minorities, that excludes those who don't fully subscribe to GOP orthodoxy, that gest distracted by its pure loathing for Bill Clinton.

his party, and his country, will be under his direction. "We will extend the promise of prosperity to every forgotten corner of this country," he said in accepting the GOP presidential nomination. "We are now the party of ideas and innovation, the party of ideals man dinclusion. The party of a simple and powerful hope."

That was a simple and powerful message. It was one the GOP, and voters, needed to hear.

Bush gave a speech full of ideas. It was about giving poor parents real choices in the education of their children and ending "the soft higotry of low expectations." It was about answering deep concerns over American health care. It was about defining, finally, America's role and responsibilities in the post-Cold War world.

Bush seeks a party that is true to its century-and-a-half message of promoting opportunity, liberty and individual rights. He also seeks a party – and the GOP has lost sight of this from time to time in recent years – that commits to delivering on that promise to everyone.

Bush spoke of the wall between a nation of wealth and a nation of poverty. "We must tear down that wall," he said. "Big government is not the answer. But the alternative to bureaucracy is not indifference. It is to put conservative values and conservative values and conservative values and conservative ideas into the thick of the fight for justice and opportunity," For many people watching this address, this was probably their first extensive look at the Texas governor. They saw a confident leader who makes a compelling case that he has the intuition, capacity and ideals to restore bipartisan cooperation in Washington.

Bush, to be sure, barely touched some of the issues – abortion, gun violence that so often have resisted such bipartisant cooperation in Washington.

While Joe always had a recommendation for his son, he was more passionate about some matters than others. Then-Florida Sen. George Smathers once recalled a poolside conversation between father and son about who ought to be attorney general. This time, Dad was looking out for son Bobby, who needed legal experience. "He deserves to be attorney general, and by God, that's what he's going to be. Do you understand that?" "Yes, sir," Jack gulped.

And when Joe wasn't advising the nation's CEO about whom to hire and what to do, he was seeing after Jack's legacy, Joe Kennedy pitched the idea of making a film of "PT-109," the book about JFK's World War II rescue of his fellow servicemen, to old pal Jack Warner. After it was green-lighted, JFK approved the script and Cliff Robertson, the actor who played him, while Joe negotiated the rights.

Having helped Jack and Bobby with jobs, Joe next set his sights on improving the prospects for Ted. "You boys have what you want," Joe told the two dolest ones. "Now it's Ted's turn. Whatever he wants, I'm going to see he gets it." And what do you know? Teddy got a U.S. Senate seat from Massachusetts.

Some anarchy on Internet might have to be tolerated hile it is now possible that the Napster lawsuit will lead to a landmark decision at the U.S. Supreme Court level, the specific legal issues raised by the widespread sharing of MP3 music files are only the beginning. The Napster controversy has made the front pages of major newspapers not just because it is a high-profile intellectual property lawsuit. not just because it is a high-pro-file intellectual property lawsult, but because it exemplifies the larger debate over whether our legal system is up to the task of controlling cyberspace. The resistance to control embodied in a technology of improcedented speed, scale and anonymity has been well-docu-mented. In addition, file-sharing that occurs cimultaneously cannot mented. In addition, file-sharing that occurs simultaneously cannot easily be halted. Napster-like software takes advantage of the same decentralized, amerine Internet architecture that facilitated the February 2000 attacks against major Web sites, and it is this architecture that is at the heart of the software code that defines the Internet.

architecture that is at the heart with software code that defines the Internet.

In the eyes of many, the law is on a major losing streak here. Attempts by Congress to protect children from online obscentily have been invalidated by the courts. Efforts to increase privacy protection have been unsuccessful. The perpetrators of the February attacks have not been caught. And now Napster is being allowed to keep operating even though many view it as nothing more than a vehicle for widespread lawless activity.

The limits of our legal system have long been recognized. Many scholars have noted, for example, that the system is often based on an implicit social contract, that it works better in some areas than in others, and that it is less effective in complex territory with many variables. In addition, there are obvious practical limits inherent in any effort to bring everything and everyone under control. While all these principles are applicable in cyberspace, romer more important than the imilici thing and everyone under control. While all these principles are applicable in cyberspace, none ismore important than the implicit social contract. If enough people decide—as they apparently have social contract. If enough people decide—as they apparently have in the case of MP3 file-sharing—that an existing law can be imported or defield, then that law quickly becomes irrelevant. And things may get worse in the future as wireless technology improves and internet-enabled gadgets become smaller, faster and more efficient.

Some have argued that given the limits of our legal system, changes in software code are the only answer. But computer software that filters out content or extracts certain online activity can be countered by other software programs and technical protection systems. It is well-known in cyber-security circles, the countered by the creation of other software that can break through the new code.

Outside of widespread dracon-that can break through the new code.

Outside of widespread draconian changes in the nature of cyberspace itself, technology-based approaches alone are not likely to solve the problem. Some believe, therefore, that it may come down to a trade-off: Either change the current architecture and give up the Internet as we currently show it, or keep the current architecture and put up with some level of decentralized anarchic activity in the spirit of the greater good.

But the impact of traditional legal systems should not be dismissed out of hand. Over the past five years, the law has helped address certain key Internet-related problems, particularly when the rules are clear and the activity is similar to analogous offline behavior. The Federal Trade Commission, for example, has been quite effective are policing online consumer fraud, and international law enforcement cooperation has helped limit online child pornography. Thinking outside the box will require creative combinations of pornography. Thinking outside the box will require creative combinations of "regulatory models," such as pairing a traditional legal approach with technology-based adjustments and at the same time increasing the level of international cooperation. Indeed, such creativity will be necessary if we are to successfully address many of these issues. But if we are comitted to maintaining the present-day version of the Internet, then consensus will be an essential component of any effective problem-solving approach. As long as there are a host of ways to get around certain restrictions, a buy-in will inevitably be necessary from all those who have the ability to resist any new regulation. And some form of centralized leadership may in fact be ently way to foster such a consensus. The current decentralized approach to Internet governance may prove to be a luxury that we cannot utilimately afford.

Let's take dairibs seriously In 1950, family farms might have had 12 to 25 head of milk cows. Not so very many years ago, the larger dairies might have had 100 to 200 head. Then came commercial-size operations with 500 to 1,000 head.
Today, we have industrialsized operations starting up, aiming for 3,000 to 8,000 head. So the number of cows in one place became eight times larger, then 40 times larger and now 200 times larger.
Who knows how large a dairy operation can be without fouling the earth for years to come? The increase should have been restricted while we gained experience. We may already have opened a "Pandora's Box." Let's draw some lines!

Let's learn what other states and counties have done. Obtain copies of their applicable zoning laws and regulations. Learn with the problems were and how they were solved. Let's extend the moratorium for several years.
Detailed requirements should be established for dairies of various sizes. There should be flow meters on wells, with regular reporting of water usage and close monitoring by state water officials.
Set requirements on disposal

officials.

Set requirements on disposal of animal waste similar to that of towns and cities. How many head can you have on how many acres before you build a sewer plant? Require that all solid waste be composted.

Get serious about fines for violations. It should cost much more to pay the fine than it would cost to correct the viola-would cost to correct the viola-tion.

In effect, level the playing field so that bigger isn't neces-sarily more profitable. Help the smaller operators who run a good clean dairy stay in busi-

Yes, other places may get more of the dairy action than we do. So what! Have we learned nothing from taxpayer-funded cleanup of lead and cyanide from big mines? Do we want our groundwater fouled? What is clean air, sail and water worth?

Nixon nemesis 'Deep Throat' could be a Twin Falls man ob Woodward and Carl Bernstein usually try to stay above the fray when it comes to speculation. The fray when it comes to speculation at the identity of Deep Throat, the fabled secret source that helped them crack. Watergate for the Washington Post.

So it's worth noting that Woodward took the fascinating and unusual step of flat-out denying the contention of former Richard Nixon aide Leonard Garment – made in Garment's new book, "In Search of Deep Throat: The Greatest Political Mystery of Our Time" – that the shadowy Sototh-swilling, garage-lurking source is longtime. Mystery of Our Time" – that the shadowy Scotch-swilling, garage-lurking source is longtime Republican operative John Sears.

Sears issued a strong denial himself.

Sears issued a strong denial himself.

"It categorically deny this," said Sears, who worked in the Nixon and Reagan administrations. "I offered to take a lie detector test to prove my innocence of this charge. Neither the author nor his publisher was willing to accept this offer."

Now anybody who has kept this secret for 26 years, through guess after guess, likely intends to take—it no the grave, so Sears' denial however straightforward, is to be expected. But when Woodward weighed in, Garmenn's theory was essentially obliterated.

Woodward, when presented with fresh speculation over the years, usually responds in the same way. He reassers that Deep Throat is a real person, not a composite character. He refuses to play the guessing game. And he says that arrangements liave been made to identify Deep Throat upon the source's death.

But Woodward took Sears out of the running himself last week.

But Woodward took Sears out of the running himself last week.

DAVID DALEY

It's only the third time he's made such an explicit denial. (Woodward eliminated Al Haig in the 1980s, when speculation dogged Haig's brief presidential run, and also former FBI director L. Patrick Gray when CBS News named him in a Watergate retrospective.) Woodward told his own newspaper. "Sears doesn't even begin to fit the description of somebody who held the sensitive position in the executive branch at the time Carl Bernstein and I were doing the Watergate reporting." And if there was any wiggle room in that statement, he gave NBC's. "Dateline" a straight "no" when asked about Sears.

Garment, in an interview last week, sounded nonplused by all the denials. "That just reinforced my belief that it is Sears." Garment said. "The Theor Thomas is Rob Woodward's "Theor Thomas I so Rob Woodward's "Theor Thomas Town Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Theor Thomas I so Rob Woodward's "Theor Thomas "Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thomas Thomas "Thom week, sounded nonplused by all the denials.

"That just reinforced my belief that it is Sears," Garment said.
"Deep Throat is Bob Woodward's ace in the hole. This is his franchise. He doesn't want it frittered away on somebody else's book.
Trouble is, that simply doesn't square with Woodward's very consistent pattern of handling these inquiries. And the trouble with Garment's book is that he names Sears on very dubious grounds, some of which suggest a basic misreading of Watergate history.

history.

Deep Throat was a long-standing source of Woodward's.
Bernstein certainly had an extensive network of contacts himself.
Garment, however, claims to recognize Sears in quotes attribute to Bernstein's sources – some of which Sears has admitted being the source for. To suggest that Deep Throat was both Woodward's and Bernstein's source strains credulity. The two reporters made such a good team because they had very different networks. Woodward's days in the military and the Ivy League presented one set of sources; Bernstein grew up in Washington and had another world of bureaucrats and sources buried deep in Washington's. The source known as Deep Throat had been a Woodward pal before Watergate. He fed him information on the attempted assassination of George Wallace. And, according to Adrian Havill's fascinating biography." Deep Truth: The Lives of Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein," Deep Throat fed Woodward a steady stream of insider information even in his pre-Post days at the small Montgomery County Sentinel.

dence to Woodward's denials now, he also puts too much emphasis on the Deep Throat descriptions in their book "All the President's Men." Garment descriptions in their book "All the President's Men." Garment says that Sears matches the Scotch-drinking, chain-smoking source and was the kind of guy who would go for parking garange meetings and surreptitious cloak-and-dagger signal games. The problem with that is that Havill's book meticulously fact-checked those signal games and fairly conclusively argues that they were fictional. The Scotch, the flowerpot on the balcony, the parking garanges all red herring, all possible pieces of some Woodward source, but all of them do not belong to Deep Throat. "If it's not Sears, I don't know who in the world it could possibly be," Garment said.

The best guess here remains former high-ranking FBI man W. Mark Felt, who, as we've argued in the past, had both the information and the motivation. Felt who is originally from Twin iPalls. Idaho, has denied being Deep. Throat Bernstein – by far the more playful of the "Woodstein" pair on the Deep Throat question – issued a nondenial denial and-coply asked, "IS Mark Felt still alive?"

"After 26 years, it's time for the public to find out who Deep

Here's guessing that Leonard

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands
(AP) - The biggest world conference for evangellcal Protestant leaders ever concluded Sunday night with a Communion service, rousing songs by a multiracial youth choir from 50 nations and brief marching orders from its absent chairman, the Rev. Billy Graham.
Graham, looking reasonably fit but speaking in a husky voice, had prerecorded his remarks Saturday in Rochester, Minn., where he is recovering from surgery.

"Let us light a fire of-commitment to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the power of the Holy Spirit to the ends of the earth, using every resource at our command, and with every ounce of our strength," he said.

He also urght the crowd to light fires that would renew faith in the Rible as God's priority, banks moral blight and "roll back the poisons of racism, poverty and injustice."

Grahum had been too ill to deliver his scheduled address by video hookup at the first session I buly 39. Participants at the $40 million event came from 209 nations and erritories, making it probably the most diverse Christian conference.

Jesus is the "one and only Savior," it says, and the only path to salvation is belief in his death on the cross to overcome human sith Hell and destruction awalt those outside Christ. And the Bible God's "totally true and trustworthy" revelation.

Graham's son and designated successor, Franklin Graham, indicated in an interview he was dublous about the declaration. "I don't know why every time we have a meeting we have to have a document," he said. "The Bible's the document, because we believe it word for word."

The evangelical activists were also asked to join Graham in privately signing a second text, a 14-point "Covenant for Evangelists," ledding to be faithful, Bible-based and ethical representatives of Christianity. After silent reflection, most stood to indicate their dedication.

The two documents, loosely drawn from speeches and discussions among 900 participants meeting in strategy discussions, were written by the Rev. Timothy George of the Southern Baptist divinity school at Samford University in Birmingham, Ala., and eight colleagues from Australia, Britain, Guatemala, South Africa, South Korea, Sri Lanka and the United States.

Japan pauses to recall Hiroshima bombing

HIROSHIMA, Japan (AP)—
The tolling of a lone bell Sunday amid the summertime drone of cicadas, and then the voices of singing children, marked the day 55 years ago when the United States unleashed "hell on earth" on the people of Hiroshima. Sixty seconds of silent prayer commenced at 8:15 a.m. – the moment that at U.S. B-29 bomber dropped an atomic bomb on the city on Aug. 6, 1945.

Many of the estimated 30,000 to 50,000 people in Peace Memorial Park bowed their heads, some fingering Buddhist prayer beads in the muggy heat. "It has been precisely 55 years since one single atomic bomb created a hell on earth," Mayor Tadatoshi Akiba said in the city's annual peach declaration. "Unfortunately, our most fervent hope, to see nuclear weapons uloitsted by the end of this centre, has not been realized." "Fifteen hundred doves were released into the sky at the ceremoty, which is televised nationally every year. Three hundred children sang a song of peace.

The bomb killed about 140,000 people. Three days later, the United States dropped a second atomic bomb on Nagasaki, killing 70,000 people. Japan surrendered on Aug. 15, 1945, ending World War II. The bomb killed about 140,000

The mudslide occurred as the group made its way at an altitude of about 6,600 feet from the First Crindelwald mountain to the Grosse Scheldegg – a route described by tourist brochures as romantic and flower-filled.

Two people managed to free themselves with only minor scrapes but three more were swept 66 feet down into a swollen mountain stream, where their bodies were found.

The next step is over-the-counter medications – so-called H2 blockers, such as Zantac and Pepcid – which are advertised heavily on television and in magazines. But people who suffer from hearburn more than twice a week need to see a doctor.
Beyond H2 blockers, there's a more powerful class of drugs known as proton-pump inhibitors, sold by prescription as Prevacid and Prilosec. For most folks, these drugs do the trick, but in a

STORY What contributes to-the-problem and what doesn't

Smoking causes heartburn. Heartburn happens when the lower esophageal sphinter (called the LES) located at the junction of the esophagus and the stomach, either relaxes inappropriately or is very weak. This allows the highly acidic contents of the stomach to hack up intel the esophagus. Studies have shown that smoking decreases the strength of the esophagus. Studies have shown that samoking decreases the strength of the esophagus. To make matters worse, smoking also seems to promote the movement of bile from the intestine to the stomach to produce more harmful reflux material, Smoking may also directly injure the esophagus, possibly tajure the esophagus, possibly tajure the esophagus also directly injure the esophagus, possibly tajure the esophagus, possibly tajure the esophagus, possibly tajure the esophagus, possibly tajure the former directly and from the stomach.

amount of saliva, making it less able to resist further damage by-material refluxed from the stomach.

If you're overweight, you're more prone to reflux disease. A Duke University study concluded that a program of exercise and weight reduction almost always decreases gastroesophageal reflux in obese persons.

Chocolate and peppermint cause hearthurn. Both foods cause the LES to relax and allow the contents of the stomach to back up into the esophageas in the stomach from the stomach to back up into the esophages, some goes for tomato-products, citrus fruits, coffee and fried and farty foods.

Hearthurn isn't caused by a hiatat-hernia. A-Hatal hernia is the protrusion of part of the stomach through a teardrop-shaped hole in the diaphragm where the esophagus and the stomach join. But larger hiatal hernias – common in people older than 60 – do tend to develop in patients with long-term reflux disease.

Pepcid with cure. Over-the-counter remedies (called 112-blockers) may help infrequent hearthurn, but taken long-term rethy tend to cause diarrhea, altered calcium metabolism and magnesium retention (a serious side-effects for folks with kidney disease.)

Scientists home in on 'The Zone'

You've heard of athletes being in "The Zone." For Tiger Woods and other elite athletes, it's an altered state of being that enables them to focus so deeply that their actions become almost automatic, and success comes much easier. Now, University of Chicago scientists are peering deep into the brains of nine top women pro golfers to find out with appens neurologically when they enter that zone. Researchers hope the answers will lead to new methods of helping stroke patients relearn tasks such as walking.

One thing's for sure: Both Al Gore and George Bush are fit to be president. So says USA Weekend magazine, which had both can a close race. Gore's resting blood pressure was miles a week at a 9-minutes-per-mile pace, Bush runs up to 24 miles a week at a 7-mintes-per-mile pace. Gore's best time in a 262mile marathon is 4 hours, 58 minutes; Bush's best, 3 hours, 44 minutes. Both do strength training – Gore even takes dumbbells (the kind you lift, that is) on the road.

A time of self-doubt

Menstruation affects not only your mood, women, but also your self-esteem. So says Self magazine, citing a study in Psychology of Women Quarterly, which found that college-aged women who thought a man knew they were menstruating were more apt to think he disliked them than women who didn't believe the man knew.

Fighting superbugs

Fighting superbugs

Frightening news accounts about bacteria that are resistant to drug treatments are becoming more common. Public health officials say it will take a concerted effort from physicians and the public to beat the threat so the National Consumers League has put together two free pamphlets to explain the problem and how to fight it. The first guide,—Bacterial-Resistance,—explains how these "superbugs" develop, while the second one, "Beating Bacteria," offers easy tips on how to keep them away. The pamphlets are available from the National Consumers League at 1701 K Sireet NW, Suite 1200, (Mashington, 20006, or by calling (202) 335-3323. They are also online at www.nchet.org.

Hems make a statement

This summer I have been seeing many skirt and pant hems that are visual focal points. It's not only a matter of length, it's also an interesting finish at the hemline. Various treatments can be adapted to the garments we are sewing right now and for fall.

Uneven hems: The asymmetrical hem is back, high on one side. It's often interpreted in double-layered sheer fabrics for summer. Try this at the lower edge of a skirt, dress or unit top. Trendy jackets and skirts are also being shown with a cropped back or front hemline, not even all around. (You might have a pattern with this look from several years back.)
Ruffles and flounces: Gathered or circular, this treatment is now added circular.

 Ruffles and flounces: Gathered or circular, this treatment is now added to some skirt bottoms. You can also "lettuce" the edge of any knit that has a stretch factor of 50 percent or more. The fluted or wavy edge is achieved by stretching the fabric as you see. It's done on a conventional muchine with a salin stuch (close zig-methine with a salin stuch (close zigzag) or on a serger using the rolled zag) or on a serger using the tonce edge stitch.

• Trims: Today's young people love ribbon or band trim applied to the bot-tion of their jeans or cropped pants. The mature home-sewer can add an embroidered band to the hem of a dentim jumper or a wide lace trim to a long skirt. Coordinate it with a jacket, band across the hips if that might be unflattering.)

• Fringes: Packaged fringe is another popular addition to hendines. Or you can also make your own by machine-stitching across the fabric and then pulling out the crosswise threads for a few inches. For this, try denim or loosely woven cottons.

• Stitched embellishment: If you have an embroidery machine, make a border around a skirt or pant leg with colorful stitching. Or stencil, stamp or paint along the hendine, creating rows of animals, flowers or geometric-shapes.

On mantic nights, sweat can be a good thing. Walking down the alse at a wedding, it's bad. lar. Most of us avoid it or disguise it.

For some of us, sweat is so excessive that it ruins lives. This is also the bad side of sweat. Jim Garza, a surgeon who operates the Hyperhidrosis Clinic USA in Houston, says there's a stigma against heavy sweating, called hyperhidrosis in medical circles. People see sweat and they hink the person who is sweating is nervous or anxious or lying or cick or way too worked up.

"People think heavy sweating is an emotional or psychological candition, when really it is a physiological condition that is genetic, and the person cannot help it," Garza says.

They all opted for surgery. The clinic treats excessive sweating through an outpatient

The clinic treats excessive sweating through an outpatie surgical procedure in which the surgeon makes a small incision near the armpit and clamps the "sweat nerve" to stop transmissions. Of the many reasons we come up with for the being more active common, while some peo-ple can be persuaded to simply move health higher on their pri-ority list, for many others the amount of exercise time recom-mended ~20 to 60 minutes a day, depending on whose guidelines you're following ~ can itself be an obstacle. In busy lives, finding even 10 minutes at a time might seem out of reach, especially for those starting from scratch. Or if they attempt it, they become so they attempt it, they become so sore or tired that they're not keen to continue.

When readers have asked me as fitness columnist for advice on starting an activity program and as fitness columnist for advice on starting an activity program and staying with it, increasingly I've suggested they-pick-an-extremely-short amount of time and decide to exercise that much each day. For those in decent shape it might be 10 minutes; for others who have been sedentary 1 minute might be enough. The initial idea is to make the amount of time so ridiculously short that they can't rationalize themselves out of doing at least that amount of time.

Another premise is that once we get going on that short exercise session, we often begin to feel better (or at least concede that it's not so bad) and, decide we can spare more than we thought. Eventually we might find those 20 to 60 minutes. But small improvements in fitness-even without weight loss – have been shown to lower risk of disease and early death.

The third and probably most important basis for this short-session approach is to commit – willingly, not begrudgingly – to doing something in the way of activity. exercise, working our or whatever we might call it, every day, forour health. About 14 million Americans suffer from coronary artery disease, which can transform routine daily activities into gasp-for-breath tasks. But many of them are poor candidates for the most commonly performed repairs.

For those patients, doctors have been studying chemicals that encourage the creation of tiny, new channels to get around clogged arteries, essentially inducing patients to grow their own bypasses.

Promoting the creation of those new blood vessels - through a process called angiogeness - to fight heart disease is an infry concept that patients would welcome as an alternative to bypass and angioplasty.

By outning off a tumor's blood supply, and thus its supply of nutrients and oxygen, he proposed doctors could literally starve a tumor to death – a notion ridiculed by many colleagues. Soon afterward, he helped discover a molecule that would stop blood vessel formation – dirst step toward demonstrating the merit of his theory. They're trying to harness the power of new blood vessels to move nourishing blood through weakened hearts. In 1997, researchers announced with speat fanfare that they were able to grow new arteries in the legs of heart patients with poor circulation using a gene for vascular endothelial growth factor.

Lactose intolerance may not be forever

The Washington Post

Growing awareness of lactose intolerance over the past decade has led to a spinoff worry: that swearing off milk and other dairy products might prvent millions of Americans from getting adequate calcium. Teen-age African-American girls are at particular risk, because most have trouble digesting lactose, the main sugar in milk, and their average intake of calcium is well below recommended levels, according to federal health surveys.

Undigested milk sugar can cansuse symptoms of lactose intolerance: intestinal gas; bloating-cramps and diarrhea. The severity varies with the individual.

But a Purdue University study suggests that lactose intolerance and dairy-in-the-diet need not be an-eitherfor-choice. Even teen.

The downside, addiction specialists say, is that rates of smoking are on the rise among younger people, and many who start in their late teens and early 20s seem to consider cigarettes a strictly social, and therefore mostly harmless, pleasure. One cup of milk contains about 300 milligrams of calcium, nearly one-quarter of the recommended daily dose for teen-agers and adults. The findings build on previous research at the University of Minnesota showing that some adults who consider themselves lactose intolerant can actually digest lactose — and even those who have trouble may be able to drink a glass of milk a day without the state of American adolescents are alrected. The percentage who are actually lactose intolerant - experiencing symptoms from eating or drinking dairy products - is unknown, but "much smaller,"

"The result," Pierce says, "is that there's no place left to smoke, except maybe the car or the garden." In effect, public and private restrictions are stripping the habit of its most traditional, most intimate connections: the coffee break, the pre- and postlunch trent, the emergency stress-reducer, even the after-sex moke. Some are posers who simply want an accessory with their designer gin, something to flick and flourish for public consumption. Wildfire evacuees get brief visit home Town

HAMILTON, Mont.
Hundreds of residents driven from their homes by smoke and flames were allowed to return for a few hours Sunday as firefighters made progress against dozens of wildires burning in the Northern Rockies.
From his house on a mountain ridge about a mile and a half from a 3,600-acre wildfire, Bill Holzer can see the flames and their path of destruction.

IDAHO FALLS – Hundreds of Marines have arrived to help the Forest Service battle the Clear Creek fire, the country's biggest blaze, about 12 miles west of Salmon.

Eight crews of 20 people are on the Clear Creek lines. The Marines will provide 25 more crews as part of what they call Task Force Wilditre.

"We realise it's going to be prety bad up there, that the crews there are pretty thred," said Co. Mark Callihan, the 3rd Bartalion's commanding officer. CHICAGO - The same technology that brought us the Internet and wireless phone calls stands ready to put the brakes on rising energy costs, as well as giving us rejueter air conditioners and cleaner clothes.

Amid the flashier aspects of smart appliances making their way to market - such as refrigerators that know when you run short, of milk and order some mortoline - less has been said about the more practical applications on the horizon.

the horizon.

But after a summer of rising gasoline prices and the prospects of double-digit rate hikes for heating fuel this winter, consumers may be receptive to technology that can shave home use of electricity by 30 percent or more.

Indeed, people in Japan and Europe, where energy costs are higher than in the United States, already benefit from appliances controlled by electronic chips that optimize motor operations and shut down appliances once their job is done. Some high-end appliances for the U.S. market also feature smart controls, and more soon will.

PHILADELPHIA - In his 1884 science-fiction classic, "Fladand," and thematician Edwin A. Abbott wrote of mythical 2.D shapes that silid around each other in a per-fectly flat world, unaware of - and unable to comprehend - the 3-D universe above and below them. At the time, Abbott and his Victorian colleagues were toying with the possibility that we are just as trapped in our own world of length, width and depth, oblivious to fourth or fifth dimensions surrounding us. Since then, the notion of extra dimensions cropped up in both science and science fiction.

It's all been very theoretical in the past. But now, physicists say they have ways of actually probing for these extra dimensions detecting their subtle effects using equipment that already exists or will be built in a few years.

"This would be the most excli-

Site would be the most excling thing since humanity discovered the Earth is not flat - it would give us a whole new reality to look at, a whole new universe, said Gregory Landsberg, a physicist at Fermilab, near Chicago, who is using a giant particle accelerator to look for clues.

Finding real evidence for these extra dimensions would do more than shake up humanity's world-view. It also would give scientists some long-meeded leads, in their quest to understand the fundamental nature of matter and the forces that govern it.

Extra dimensions would open the possibility that we coexist with parallel universes. Stacked in the fifth or sixth dimensions, these other universes could be inhabited by beings carrying on their lives just a hair's breadth away from us.

breadth away from us.

When "Flatland" was first written, English mathematicians were struggling to picture how four-dimensional shapes might look to us if they visited our world, keeping an open mind to the possibility that we might be as ignorant of a higher-dimensional world as the inhabitants of Flatland had been of what they ultimately discovered and called Spaceland.

Two decades after "Flatland was published, Einstein showed that time is mathematically related to the three spatial dimensions, and can be thought of as a fourth (though no one knows why time is taking us on an unstoppable one-way trip).

Physicists continued to contemthe one knows why time is taking us on an unstoppable one way trip). Physicists continued to contemplate an extra dimension of space through the 20th century, working it into their equations describing gravity, electricity and magnetism, and attempting to "unify" them into a single force. Those equations didn't work until the 1980s and the rise of a theory known as superstrings, which describes physical reality as collection of invisibly small "strings."

These strings manifest them.

"strings."

Alves a smatter or energy by the way they withrate in 10-dimensional space. The dimensions called for by the mathematics of the theory would include the familiar length, width and depth, and seven more. A total of 11 if you include time.

Scientists find string theory appealing because it's the only mathematically consistent wayever found to describe the universe we observe. It promises to combine the known forces – gravity, electromagnetism and the two nuclear forces called strong and weak – into one set of equations.

But so far, they've been unable to test it.

But so far, they've been unable to test it.

The reason we can't see these extra dimensions, say the physicists, is that they are "rolled up" very small – picture a decimal point followed by 32 zeroes and then a 1. At such a tiny size, there's no conceivable way to detect their presence.

"If they're curled up at 10 to the minus 33 centimeters they are in some sense irrelevant – they are curled up where the concept of space and time are breaking down anyway," said Nima Arkani-Hamed of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory in California.

But he and two other physicists realized in 1998 that these extra dimensions need not be so diny.

The idea came as the group struggled with a long-standing problem in physics – understanding gravity and its connection to the other forces of nature.

"It goes back to an amazingly simple question," Arkani-Hamed said: Why is gravity "stupendously" weaker than the three other known forces? The nuclear forces hold the atomic nucleus together with almost unbreakable force, and even electromagnetism is strong enough to hold atoms together, say, in a piece of steel. Gravity, on the other hand, is so weak that a simple refrigerator-magnet held above a scrap of iron is strong enough to overcome the gravitational pull of the entire Earth.

Arkani-Hamed proposed an gravitational pull of the entire Earth.

Arkani-Hamed proposed an explanation. Maybe, he said, gravity just "appears weak - if no or three extra dimensions existed, gravity would be diluted by the space that extended into them."

In his version of the theory, developed with Savas Dimopoulos of Stanford University, some extra dimensions stretch much farther than had been previously predicted with string theory. But they would still be tiny perhaps amilimeter or so – meaning any activity taking place in another dimension of the universe would be happening just a millimeter away. To test the theory, scientists are from us.

To test the theory, scientists are trying to measure the force of gravity over very short distances. Although they understand gravity well enough to predict the motions of planets, stars and galaxies, they've never measured it over intervals as small as a millimeter.

If Arkani-Hamed and others are right about their extra dimensions, then bringing objects closer than a millimeter would cause gravity to pull ever so slightly stronger than was predicted by Newton and Einstein.

Eric Adelberger and colleagues at the University of Washington began testing gravity at short range with a device called a torsion pendulum. That apparatus, which is small enough to fit inside a soda can, uses a pendulum that responds to tiny changes in the gravitational force between two small metal plates.

Adelberger said he's within several months of being able to rule out at least the simplest form of the theory, which predicts two extra dimensions. Still viable would be more complicated versions that postulate another three, four, or more.

DEAR ABBY Abigail VanBuren

Unusual condition runs in the family

ed result of my husband's examination stunned us all. Bill, too, had an abdominal aortic ancurysm!

Bill was monitored for one year, until the aneurysm surgestignificantly. The operation followed a month later. The doctor's insight about the genetic factor probably saved Bill's life.

Please, Abby, inform your readers that aortic aneurysms are hereditary. If a parent or sibling has had one, then all siblings and offspring should be examined. We have been advised that our son must be tested when he reaches age 50 and should continue to have a sonogram every five years thereafter.

The cause of aneurysms is unknown, although several risk factors – notably hypertension, smoking and atherosclerosis could possibly contribute to their development and growth. They have been found to occur more frequently in males than in females. Abdominal aortic aneurysms are silent and usuall deadly if not discovered before they rupture. Ruptures are prentable with continued use of ultrasonography and CT scanning.

I hope my letter will be a red alert to anyone whose family has a history of aneurysms. Check with your dector. Don't put it off! And physicians who are unaware of-this-buddle-consider-including, "family history of aneurysms" on their new patient forms. It could save lives.

BARBARA AND BILL
GOLDSMITH, SAVANNAH, GA.

DEAR BARBARA AND BILL: I'm sure your warning will serve as a wake-up call to anyone who has a family history of aortic aneurysms. And another plus is the fact that the test is painless and non-invasive. Thank you for a letter that is sure to be a lifesaver.

DEAR ABBY: A group of women have played cards for more than 30 years. We play for money and have a jackpot for the person with the lowest score at the end of six games.

The last couple of years – or maybe longer – one lady seems to win the jackpot quite often. At the end of every game, we count our own cards, and this one lady keeps score. Most of us know she gives us the wrong count in order to win. She has been given a few "hints."

Should we make new rules and

"hints."
Should we make new rules and have all the players show their cards? It seems a shame after all these years of enjoying the game. Please advise.

- PUT OUT IN THE MIDWEST

DEAR PUT OUT: That's one way to "deal" with it. Another idea might be for the players to pass their cards to the person on the right to be tallied.

-Some officials think the muse time should build a fancy new building off the highway outside of town, a destination center that would mix education about UFOs eith, perhaps, a dose of Disney-esque entertainment. That has filed up local merchants and the Chamber of Commerce, who want the facility to stay on Main Street, where it has become a

Max Littel, 83, a shopping center developer who helped found the museum, thinks moving it is the only realistic option. "We don't have enough room, enough parking, enough storage space. We need to expand if we want to keep growing the way we should," he says emphatically, "You either go up or you go down. You can't sit still, or you get old real fast."

As for museum co-founders Dennis and Haut, who both oppose a move, Littel said, "I'm not looking to pick a fight, but they're not capable of what 'Il call development thinking... We could grow this thing five times its current size, if we go about it the right way."

With a push from Littel, the UFO museum has drawn up plans for an enormous $10 million, pyramid-shaped building that would tower above the highway and draw attention from miles away.

Last of a great generation of actors, Sir Alec Guinness dies at 86

LONDON, England (AP) – Actor Sir Alec Guinness, whose roles in a 66/year career ranged from H unlet to Obl-Wan Kenobi in "S.ar Wars," has died, a hospi-tal spokesman said Monday. He was 86.

Guinness becamé ill at his home near Petersfield, southern England and was taken by ambulance to the King Edward VII Hospital where he died Saturday, suid hospital spoke swoman Jenny Masding.
The cause of death was not released.
Sir Alec was one of the last surviving members of Britain's greatest generation of actors, which included Sir Laurence Olivier and Ralph Richardson.

From post.war comedies through epics like "The Bridge on the River Kwai," and crowdpleasers like "Stur Wars.," Guinness played a vast variety of characters with subtlety and intelligence.
Guinness was a tall man with large, expressive blue eyes and otherwise unremarkable features
- "a player's countenance, designed for whatever might turn up," crite J.C. Trewin once said.

—His precise, modulated baritone voice was distinctive, but if ever there was an actor who never played himself, it was Alee

Guinness.

"I had countless first impressions of him," playwright Ronald Harwood wrote. "Each time I saw him, in films, later in the taset, I had the uncanny feeling I had never before watched him act."

Guinness first made his mark in films in the Ealing Studio comedies of the late 1940s and the 1950s. —The wan in the White Suit, "The Loty Killers," and most remarkably in "Kind Hearts-and Coronets." In played the entire d'Ascopne family — in his own words, "eight speaking parts, one non-speaking cameo and a one non-speaking cameo and a portrait in oils."

In parts such as Fagin in "Oliver Twist," Guinness was barely recognizable behind his makeup and costume.

But with "The Bridge on the River Kwai" in 1957 he established that his versatility had nothing to do with disguise. He won an Oscar for his performance as the disciplined, inflexible Col. Nicholson in a World War II Japanese prison camp.

"Three Years later, he played Nicholson's opposite – the boorist, hard-drinking Scottish Lieut.Col. Jock Sinclair in "Tunes of Glory."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

"Thinking is hard work. One can-not bear burdens and ideas at the

- Remu de Gourmont

In today's no-trump game, South has eight running tricks-However, West's attack against South's weakness creates problems. With Lime on the side of the enemy, deplarer, must make his. next move with wisdom.

West's heart lead is an unwelcome sight. Regardless of whether South wins his ace of chummy's king, he is faced with the burden of an immediate choice. Should her by to develop a ninth winner in spades, or should be choose a desperate lead to ward dummy's club king?

This problem cannot be solved without thinking about probabilities. South can develop a hird spade winner if he finds that the suit spills 3-3. The chances for this spill are almost 36 percent. He can also score his ninth winner if West has the club king. That chance is 50-50. West is just as likely to have the ace as East is.

The thinking man's choice is to lead to dummy's club king. — a 50 percent chance is obviously better than one of 35 percent.

If East has the club ace and spades are not 3-3, will it cost percent chance is obvlously better-than one of 35 percent.

If East-has the club ace and spades are not 3-3, will it cost more in undertricks to lead clubs immediately? No, this is only an il-lusion. With the heart suit stopped, even if East can run five club winners, the most South can lose is five tricks. This makes the percentage play of leading to the club king the standout choice.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE Legion basebali State A Tournament at Lewiston

RUPERT – A mandatory playerparent meeting for Minico High School football players will be held Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. in the Minico auditorium. The first day of practice begins Friday at 8 a.m.
Players should meet in the Minico Field House with their completed paperwork, which will be available at Tuesday's meeting.

A TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls
Parks and Recreation Department
Youth Soccer Program starts Sept.
11 for boys and girls in grades K-7.
Registration is being accepted for the five-week season of eight games with fees ranging from $12$25.

games with fees ranging from $12-$25.

The department is also offering co-ed, hadies and intermediate adult soccer leagues this fall. Games will be played at Harmon Park Baseball Fields on Sundays at 3 p.m. Fees are $15 for incity-limits and $25 out of city.

A challenger co-ed soccer league is being offered for mental-ly and physically disabled youth from ages 6-18.

Registration for all soccer pro-grams runs through Aug. 11 at the Harmon Park Recreation Building from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

For more information on any of the programs, call 736-2265 or 734-4831.

Corrections

A quote attributed to College of Southern Idaho men's basketball coach Derek Zeck Sunday contained an incorrect word. "... how could we can be," should've read,
"... how good we can be."
Also, golfer Lynn Reiersgord's name was misspelled in a headline Sunday.
The Times-News regrets the errors.

Buhl drops to consolation, Wood River heads home

By John Derr Times-News writer

LEWISTON – Following what many considered the best game of the tournament on Saturday, Buhl and Wood River struggled to get things going on Sunday.

The Indians, who came away with the 5-2 victory over Wood River Saturday, was forced to the consolation bracket after falling 10-7 to the Prairie Cardinals.

The Tribe's bats were quiet most of the game until a last-inning surge fell short.
The news was worse for Wood River, whose lack of offense eliminated them from the tournament after falling to the Boise Gems 7-0 to open the day.
In other action Sunday, host Lewis-Clark stayed alive with a 7-1 win over the Boise Capitals early, but then were eliminated by the Boise Gems 4-3 in the late game.

--Williams beats Seles, runs win streak to 15

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Venus Williams is making a strong bid for the No. 1 ranking.
The Wimbledon champion claimed her third straight tournament title Sunday when she held off a tough challenge from Monica Selse en route to a 6-0, 6-7 (3), 6-3 victory at the $535,000 Acura Classic.
Williams, ranked third behind
Martina Hingis and Lindsay Davenport, currently has no peer on Tour as she captured her third straight tournament title.

"I'm playing my best tennis," said Williams, who won $87,000 along with the title. "There's a lot of things that I'm not doing right, but I'm still winning."

The numbers back up Williams, who is ranked third behind Martina Hingis and Lindsay Davenport. Against Seles, Williams had 55 winners but also committed 33 unforced errors. She made just 51 percent of her first serves and had 14 double faults.

Tennis

Williams' tournament victory streak includes her first Grand Slam tournament title at Wimbledon, then last week's Bank of the West Classic, where she beat Davenport in the final.
"She has more confidence now," said the fifth-ranked Seles. "Winning Wimbledon has helped her out a lot?

Safin overpowers qualifier

Safin overpowers qualifier
Levy for first series title
TORONTO - Marat Safin ended Harel Levy's surprising run at the Tennis Masters Series-Canada tournament, overpowering the Israeliq qualifier 6-2, 6-3 Sunday for the title.
Safin needed only 54 minutes, not including two brief rain delays, to pick up his first

Masters Series tournament victory and the $400,000 winner's check.

The eighth-seeded Russian, who upset Pete Sampras in the quarterfinals, struck 25 winners in the final to Levy's 14.

Levy was attempting to become the first qualifier to win this event and the first qualifier to capture any ATP tournament since Spain's Roberto Carreter won in Hamburg, Germany, four years ago.
